Question — 6 Marks

Sale of Goods Act, 1930 — Section 16(1): Fitness for a Particular Purpose

Riya informs a machinery dealer that she requires a machine for cutting 5 mm steel sheets in her workshop. The dealer recommends a particular machine, assuring her that it is suitable for the stated purpose. Riya purchases the machine relying on the dealer's recommendation. After delivery, she discovers that the machine cannot cut steel sheets of the required thickness, although it works for ordinary purposes. Advise Riya whether she can claim that the seller has breached an implied condition under the Sale of Goods Act, 1930.

Illustrative: 2/6

In this case, the seller is liable because Riya told him the purpose for which she wanted the machine. The seller recommended the machine, but it did not work according to her requirements.

Under the Sale of Goods Act, 1930, the seller must supply goods that are fit for the buyer's purpose. Since the machine cannot cut 5 mm steel sheets, the seller has breached the condition.

Therefore, Riya can take legal action against the seller.

Why this answer needs improvement

- The relevant section is not mentioned.
- The legal provision is stated vaguely.
- The essential requirements of Section 16(1) are not explained.
- The answer does not properly connect each requirement with the facts.

RIGHT COLUMN — The Law कक्षा Model Answer

STRUCTURED LEGAL ANSWER

The Law कक्षा Model Solution

Model Answer

1. Relevant Provision

According to Section 16(1) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1930, where the buyer makes known to the seller the particular purpose for which the goods are required, thereby relying on the seller's skill or judgment, and the goods are of a description that the seller ordinarily supplies in the course of business, there is an implied condition that the goods shall be reasonably fit for that purpose.

This provision is subject to the statutory exception relating to the sale of a specified article under its patent or other trade name.

2. Application of Law

In the present case, Riya informed the machinery dealer that she required a machine capable of cutting 5 mm steel sheets. The particular purpose was therefore communicated to the seller.

Further, the dealer recommended a machine and assured Riya of its suitability. Riya relied on the dealer's skill or judgment in purchasing it.

However, the machine failed to perform the specific function for which it was purchased, even though it worked for ordinary purposes. This indicates that the machine may not be reasonably fit for Riya's particular purpose.

3. Conclusion

Therefore, subject to the remaining requirements of Section 16(1) being satisfied and no applicable exception excluding the implied condition, Riya may claim that the seller has breached the implied condition as to fitness for a particular purpose.

What makes this answer more complete

- Identifies the relevant statutory provision.
- States the essential legal requirements.
- Applies the law to the specific facts.
- Gives a reasoned conclusion with the necessary qualification.
